

SCIO (QXCI) and The Verbal Mind

Professor William C. Nelson

In our development of a new approach to health and wellness—what I call Superconscious Awareness Medicine—there is a somewhat thorny issue that must be addressed. Although many feel the verbal mind is all there is, the truth is that the verbal mind makes up a very small part of the brain.

Behind the left ear on most people (more than 999 out of a 1,000), there is the “Broca” area about the size of a golf ball, which is where we put together our words, along with other parts of the left hemisphere. This is our linear mind so that we can organize in subject-predicate-object. In this part of the brain, the flow of time is linear, like a river.

Much has been written about our “split brain”; we also have a “right brain.” This “split brain” gives us a dichotomy of two types of perspective—the “left brain” is the linear-verbal “scientific mind” and the “right brain” is the more intuitive, unconscious, non-verbal “gestalt mind.”

There are over 200 trillion cells, which make up the whole of the human body, each of which has receptors and sensors in constant communication with each other in order to sense our environment. Each of these 200 trillion cells sends messages to the brain and receives messages via our electric field, conductivity, hormonal conductivity, and a host of other energy transfers. In addition, the human body is also in contact with its environment through our senses—sight, smell, touch, taste, sound, as well as the extra-sensory senses. Then, in addition to the profound, incredibly vast amount of data that is reaching us through our senses, there is another vast amount of data sent to our brain from all of the cells of the body responding to the vast amount of data from the senses.

There is estimated to be somewhere between 500 trillion to 900 trillion bits of information reaching the brain at any one second of time. There is a filter area at the base of the brain known as the “reticular formation” which breaks up vast number of signals that are coming to the brain and chooses only certain signals and feeds these to the conscious brain. Thus, it is estimated that the conscious brain will receive only between 100,000 and 1,000,000 bits of the 500-900 trillion bits of information coming to it each second. The rest of the data goes to what we call the “superconscious” brain (it is also sometimes called the “unconscious” brain).

No matter where you are, even if you are sitting quietly in your own home, you are inhaling millions or even trillions bits of particles and thousands of bacteria, fungi, spores and viruses. If you go to the mall where the air is recycled and viruses and bacteria are not filtered, there is an incredible build-up of material. In addition, it has been found that every year there is a greater build-up of pollen in the air than there was in the year before. There is simply a dramatic accumulation of things that we are now being exposed to.

Although less than 1% of 1% of 1% (ad infinitum) of our life experience gets to our conscious verbal brain, this verbal brain likes to pretend that it is in control. It likes to analyze things in its so-called scientific aspect. It likes to look for replications, reproductions and consistency so it can establish a connection in its interaction with its environment. However, in truth, the vast majority of our actions are not dictated by our logic, verbal mind but come from our deep subconscious—from gut feelings and from the heart and other areas. It is the unconscious that brings us to the places that we go in our life. When we get there, our verbal consciousness rationalizes and attempts some kind of explanation for how we got there—and, if challenged, it can quickly change its mind and come up with another explanation. The rationalization ability of the verbal mind is endless.

The QXCI / SCIO interfaces with the unconscious (superconscious) body because the unconscious mind controls the body electric, not the verbal mind. There is an innate intelligence in every cell, which gives that cell its life. We don't have to think about the myriad activities going on in our bodies because the biology or innate intelligence of the superconscious is in control of our electrical, chemical and other factors. Our digestion happens automatically without our having to think about it. Our autonomic nervous system controls our immune system and many other factors. Even if our verbal mind is removed (as when we sleep) or if it is inactivated, the life process of healing continues.

The superconscious will always produce life and healing if we allow it. As a matter of fact, the more the verbal mind tries to intrude on a life process, the more it will disrupt it. If you sit down with your verbal mind after you have eaten a meal and begin to think about what enzymes are being released, how much hydrochloric acid, and so forth, it will actually interrupt and disturb the digestive function. The more we try to think about our natural functions, the more we disrupt the energy and the function of healing.

If we have a broken bone, it is not the doctor that heals it, it is not the verbal mind that heals it. It is the superconscious ability of the lifeforce contained in the cells that will initiate cellular repair. It will try to establish health and restore functioning to organs that have been hurt. We can only help it do its job.

However, in our society we have put so much stock into our tiny conscious mind because of its ability to accumulate technology that we have lost touch with our powerful, amazing superconscious. Our patients/clients may look at the reactive items that are on the screen and balk because they cannot understand them—as if their conscious mind could understand all of the factors they are exposed to.

As an example, we were testing individuals at a QXCI / SCIO booth in Germany. The pastuliris bacteria, a bacteria contained inside the kimono dragon, showed up for 5 patients in a row. The kimono dragon was one of the last of the dinosaurs, lived in the most exotic places in the world such as Madagascar and is now very rare. People who have been bitten by a kimono dragon usually die within a year although some last 10 years or so. It is almost impossible to cure a kimono dragon bite because it contains this very pestilent, very toxic (to humans) bacteria, in its mouth, which starts its process of digestion. I had never seen this bacteria show up in tests over the last 10 years and suddenly there were 5 people in a row.

The people said, "The device must be broken. I've never been exposed to a kimono dragon. Why could this possibly show up?" They felt the verbal mind should understand. Finally, one of the people at the booth shared with me that 5 years prior, he had been bitten by a kimono dragon and was still dealing with a festering wound. His mere presence at the booth, as he exhaled different bacteria, created a reactivity surge in individuals who were there at that time. Had we not known about the man who had been bitten, we would have thought the device was indeed broken. We would have been wrong.

Years ago when I first developed the QXCI device, my stepson came to me with a bacterial infection. We set up cultures and discovered that the infection was hemoitic strepth, e-coli and proteus. When we tested him on the QXCI, we came up with hemolytic strepth, e-coli, proteus and measles; it confirmed what the cultures showed plus it added measles. He said, "I've never had measles. How could this have come up?" My verbal mind tried to rationalize it in a number of ways. The next morning on television, there was a story about how one of the local dorms at a nearby college was closed because of a measles outbreak. I said, "Chad, where were you last weekend?" He said, "Oh, I spent the night at one of the dorms at the college to explore whether I wanted to go there." Indeed, he had stayed in the same dormitory that was now closed, and he had been exposed to measles. His immune system reacted to the measles.

As I have gone through years and years working with the QXCI programs, and now the SCIO, many things will show up on the screen that the person balks at with their verbal mind. Always, upon deeper exploration I have found that the individual's unconscious is extremely more intelligent than the verbal mind. When things come up on the screen, we have to find another way of dealing with this information. We have to start finding the superconscious within ourselves, which is far superior to the conscious verbal mind.

The verbal mind is like a small child trying to understand things, whereas the innate intelligence of the superconscious can fix and repair cells at a cellular level, move electrons and photons in a precise fashion and do an incredible amount of technology that makes anything that has every been developed by the verbal mind seem passé. The actions, of even one cell, cannot be duplicated by any scientists or any researchers in the world. Our verbal mind technology is incredibly far behind the technology of the superconscious, which is the technology of life.

The superconscious is incredibly vast and it is not of words. This is often scary to the verbal part of us. The verbal part is often afraid to lose this seeming control—a control the verbal mind never had to begin with, a control that the verbal mind only believes that it has. In truth, the superconscious has control of the body, the life force and the path of our lives. Some choose to call the superconsciousness our "God consciousness." Whatever names one might choose, there does seem to be a connection to a higher power.

We have found that the body responds to and is controlled by quantic functions, that the quantic functions have interactions with each other and that there is a connection with the "God consciousness" of the universe (superconsciousness if you don't like the word God). We have recognized that our bodies live and exist because of a power beyond the capacity of just our words, that our words are a powerful tool of analysis, some decision-making and some explanations, but this verbal mind tool should not be fooled into thinking that it is the master.

Oftentimes, words detract. The verbal parts of the brain can help the body decide which foods are good, when to exercise, what to exercise, what to drink, how much to drink, these kind of good judgmental decisions, but the real power of healing is in the superconscious. As we discover the powers that lie in the superconscious, which is beyond the doubts and disbeliefs of our words, we will start to uncover the super doctor within, the incredible life-force that is not of words but actually does the healing. We need to educate our doctors and teach our patients that true healing comes from the superconscious.

Since the superconscious is changing the body electric every thousandths or hundredth of a second, the QXCI / SCIO allows for an interface at biological speeds. This is the first device of its kind. When we turn on the QXCI / SCIO, we activate different approaches to allow the individual's superconsciousness to treat itself. The QXCI / SCIO auto-focuses the approach as the system interfaces with the superconsciousness, not the verbal consciousness. Devices prior to this have all been verbal devices where settings had to be set, the operator had to make verbal analyses of procedures, select specific settings and then enact different approaches. We have developed a giant new step in technology that goes beyond the verbal technology and incorporates a right-brain, intuitive technology with a superconscious interface so that the body can treat itself at biological speeds.

The next time you do a test and look at the test matrix to see what the person's superconscious has reacted to, realize that what the conscious mind doesn't comprehend is completely understandable in the bigger picture. There are millions, trillions of events unknown to the verbal mind that happen to us every minute of our lives.

We can overcome this disbelief in the QXCI / SCIO simply by not spending too much time on the "test matrix screen," moving on to other screens such the risk panel and program screens that are more easily understood by the verbal mind. Attempting to analyze every item in red on the test matrix screen would be very, very difficult for our verbal conscious minds to do.

It is up to us to make the client aware that healing will not come from the verbal conscious mind. While life education and behavioral control are run by the verbal conscious mind, healing, restoration of health, cleansing, detoxification, immunity, digestion, circulation, endocrinology, hormonal factors and all of the neurological factors that make up our bodies and being—in other words, 99.99999% of us—is controlled by the superconscious. We want to make our patients and clients comfortable with their superconscious and help them to realize that the QXCI / SCIO is a new style of technology combining both the right and left brains, male and female, scientific and intuitive energies, bringing it into the forefront of medical technology of today.
